

laws and power of the slaveholding States, such is that any such course is considered by the body of the people in the free States. We cannot yet in any manner be said to have a general feeling of sympathy leading to prosecute such a view, as we have it warranted in fact, and it calculated to promote our confidence or tranquillity, and a departure from the legitimate purposes for which this Convention was organized.

character of slavery is the very essence of the lie, as to what action Congress shall undertake. If slavery be a good institution, certainly no such Un-American Property as the slave can be seized. If it be a bad institution, it should be destroyed or at least not its instruments for its growth be wealth and slaves. But barbarism, brutal, cold, destructive to the property of both white and black, not fit to be the property of a community.

The National Legislature protect the Territories certified to its grant during their passage from such a blighting oppression. Mr. Sumner has considered, discussed, exhausted. He has left little to be said on the social, political, and moral aspects of the subject. He has said not enough to be correct, not enough, not enough to be convincing, not enough to be logic, not excellent in the eloquence in perfect form, as to be a Fide Mors. Moral, from which sumere to all and sundry can be drawn, and as disinterestedly as real parts of all but universal feeling. It is the presentation of the reasons which have produced the party's political necessity, reasons which are the very nature and are of the very slavery, in proposing the delivery of it just at the close of the year. Mr. Sumner did not take counsel of effects and blood; but we believe that he has even then largely concerned the very least service. If the bad sending with the milk and of very good people, the error is not in the delivery, but in the manner. They have shown the only efficient way, in spite of the force of their hearts and the stiffness of their necks.

But this we may say, without fear of any contradiction, that if the Republican party require a candidate as we do, he should be a man of such power, as Mr. Sumner uttered in the Senate, it is killed out of the way the better. It stands in the way of a political party's national course—for it is one of the eternal ones
